The latest clinical study on growth hormone replacement began with the troubles of one man. In 1992, at the age of forty-two, Dr. Edmund Chein, a rehabilitation specialist by training, felt as though he was rapidly going down hill. He was gaining weight and already had a huge potbelly, his cardiovascular risk factors like elevated cholesterol and triglycerides were in the danger zone, and worst of all he had started to have chest pain. His cardiologist confirmed his worst fears, telling him that his coronary artery was blocked and that any day he might have a heart attack. He immediately suggested that Chein go on cholesterol-lowering medication.

Chein decided to try a far less conventional approach. As a physical medicine and rehabilitation medicine specialist, he had used hormone replacement therapy in people whose endocrine glands had been damaged as a result of injury. He had watched as people given testosterone and human growth hormone regained function without adverse side effects. He had also read Dr. Rudman's study in 1990 with tremendous interest and stored it in the back of his mind.

Chein decided to replace all his hormones to that of a 20 year old and see if he could reverse his biological age. His theory was if he could truly revert to the point that he was at age 20, then he shouldn't have any more symptoms since he didn't have any when he was that age. Accordingly his cholesterol should come down, his triglycerides should come down, and his chest pains should go away.

As we age the production of hormones decline and with the decline of growth hormone come the signs of aging. Sure enough as Dr. Chein replaced his hormones to the levels of a 20-year-old Chein had his answer. "My chest pains stopped, my cholesterol and triglycerides become normal, and I started losing my big belly." Chein's doctor was so impressed that he decided to put himself on the hormones. Soon he was noticing the same "miraculous changes" in himself.

More than 800 people have now passed through his clinic, including movie stars and high-powered executives. Significantly, the largest group is physicians, who make up 20 percent of the patient population. According to Chein, there has not been one treatment failure. "It's a slam dunk," he says. "This is 100% effective. He also guarantees the following results: a gain in bone density of 1.5 to 2.5 percent every six months as shown on bone scan; a loss of 10 to 12 percent of body fat every six months if they are overweight; and a gain of 8 to 10 percent in muscle mass every six months. The changes in body fat to lean mass ratio will continue, he says, until the body composition has reverted to that of a twenty-year-old. And then it will stay that way.

If you have low levels of growth hormone, testosterone, thyroid hormone, and DHEA then Human Growth Hormone and DHEA may be just what the doctor ordered. Thousands are now enjoying the age-reversing, health benefits of using these two supplements and there are no negative side effects. When taken along with MSM+C the results will even more miraculous.
